

Bloomberg Businessweek

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

(Insert
hastily drafted,
legally dubious,
economically
destabilizing
executive order
here) p6

Bloomberg Businessweek

February 6 — February 12, 2017

Opening Remarks Business may be one executive order away from chaos	6
Bloomberg View In search of a Syria policy • The ban: Reckless or just incompetent?	8
Movers ▲ The ACLU gets six years of donations—in two days ▼ Snoopy needs a new home	11
Border Economics
If there's a wall, the U.S. will pay for it, one way or another	12
The barrier may land in the rough on the second hole at River Bend Golf Club	13
Mexico could soon have its own populist firebrand	15
Companies/Industries
Cadillac dares greatly in China, drags badly in the U.S.	16
The sneaker giants are happy to try Made in America (by robots)	17
More and more companies are making a rainbow connection	18
China's "leftover women" find their voice—in a skin-care ad	19
Politics/Policy
The "travel ban" heads for the courts	20
A high-stakes battle at the WTO over Chinese aluminum	22
Trump will likely get his way with Keystone. Unless he gets his way with the border tax	23
Technology
The workforce of the future is sleeping in the McDonald's parking lot	24
A Trump visa plan could rattle Silicon Valley	26
Wi-Fi routers that route better—and look better, too	27
Innovation: If we can land a man on the moon, we can teach Laundroid to fold your socks	28
Markets/Finance
Warren Buffett and Jorge Paulo Lemann are getting hungry	31
Kevin Turner, the whiz of Walmart and Microsoft, strikes out at Citadel	32
A mysterious deal may cost Anthony Scaramucci a White House post	33
Rutgers wins big in a college bowl—at the Fed	34
JPMorgan and the "Would you like fries with that?" approach	35
Features
Frenemies Israeli tech companies and Arab governments find ways to do business	36
Don't Stop 'Til You Get Enough A guide to managing the Michael Jackson estate	42
Brain Twister The NFL thinks a test for CTE would be: (a) awesome; or (b) awful	48
Etc.
John Morris is building the world's longest racetrack, and a lot more, in Pahrump, Nev.	55
Productivity: How to pack a "bug-out" bag for End Times	58
Retail: Bro, if you want to cop some serious fire, you gotta hit Grailed	60
Food: Prime rib, that tough, cold slab of wedding-reception despair, finally gets some love	61
The Critic: We've been angry at the elites, Pankaj Mishra writes, for only a few hundred years	62
What I Wear to Work: Art adviser Heather Flow can get away with plum pants	63
How Did I Get Here? Culinary entrepreneur Claus Meyer might have a hand in every restaurant in Denmark	64

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

1

"The cover is on Trump."

"I'm shocked. I thought we were going to do a Fifty Shades Darker-themed cover, timed to the upcoming release of the next brilliant film adaptation of those beloved, best-selling novels."

"No."

"So, what about Trump possibly deserves a cover?"

"His use of executive orders and the extent to which they may be destabilizing, in addition to being legally dubious."

"You make a strong case."

