In Sync with Families

12 Building Partnerships Through Classroom-Based Events

Debbie Zacarian and Michael Silverstone

How to design events that make families feel welcome and build on the rich cultural assets they bring to schools.

20 How Home Visits Transformed My Teaching

Louise El Yaafouri-Kreuzer

Visiting families' homes can connect teachers to students' histories, needs, and strengths.

26 Supporting Families in a Time of Fear

Eileen Gale Kugler

Tightened immigration policies and uncertainty are creating a "silent crisis" for students from immigrant families. Educators' response matters.

34 Beginning Again with Marginalized Parents

Jamel Adkins-Sharif

To tap parents' knowledge and support, an alternative high school program created new opportunities for communication.

40 Unlocking Families' Potential: A Conversation with Karen L. Mapp

Naomi Thiers

A noted advocate for meaningful school-family partnerships discusses how to get beyond "random acts of parent involvement."

46 Families Are Changing—and Staying the Same

Philip N. Cohen

A sociologist says educators need to understand complex family structures while celebrating common values.

52 Building Bridges Across the Autism Spectrum

Barbara Boroson

To best serve students with special needs, honor the collective wisdom of both parents and educators.

58 Engaging Parents Through Better Communication Systems

Matthew A. Kraft

New research shows that frequent, personalized outreach to parents works. How can schools support the practice?

64 Can Parent-Teacher Groups Work for All Students?

Christine Woyshner and Maia Cucchiara

The 176-year history of parent-teacher organizations is complex—and entirely relevant to today's schools.
