

TIME

CITY ON FIRE

What the fall of Mosul will mean for ISIS

By Jared Malsin

Small vertical text on the left edge, likely a barcode or tracking information.

Barcode with ISSN 9 771064 030005 and issue number 14.

2 | Conversation
4 | For the Record

The Brief

News from the U.S. and around the world

5 | The Trump-Putin honeymoon is over. Where U.S.-Russia relations go from here

8 | A guide to factions inside the White House

11 | Patton Oswalt remembers Don Rickles

12 | Egyptians mourn victims of Palm Sunday blasts

14 | Behind United Airlines' crisis: Should overbooking be illegal?

The View

Ideas, opinion, innovations

15 | A case for universal basic income

16 | A new contender for Disney's live-action box office crown

16 | The flip side of billionaires' philanthropy

17 | In Milan, see what's in store for the future of furniture

17 | Why Easter has eggs

The Features

□ The Battle for Mosul

After six months of fighting to retake Iraq's second largest city, the end is in sight

By Jared Malsin 18

Dems Start Thinkin' About Tomorrow

Inside the grassroots movement to recruit new Democratic candidates for 2018 and beyond

By Alex Altman 26

Life After Death

After losing her husband, Facebook COO Sheryl Sandberg talks frankly about grief, death and vulnerability

By Belinda Luscombe 32

Time Off

What to watch, read, see and do

37 | Margaret Atwood and Elisabeth Moss discuss the TV adaptation of The Handmaid's Tale

41 | Monsters and the Ivy League

42 | Dramatist John Leguizamo

44 | Taking on the government in Guerrilla

47 | Joel Stein hacks himself

48 | 7 Questions for abortion provider Dr. Willie Parker

▲ Iraqis wait for food distribution March 29 in Mosul's Aqeedat neighborhood

Photograph by Emanuele Satolli for TIME

ON THE COVER: A member of Iraq's federal police takes a frontline position near a train station in southwest Mosul on April 4. Photograph by Emanuele Satolli for TIME